

The Mexican flag consists of three vertical stripes: green on the left, white in the middle, and red on the right. The green symbolizes hope and independence, the white represents purity and religion, and the red stands for the bloodshed by those who fought for Mexico's freedom. In the center of the white stripe, there is the national emblem, which features an eagle perched on a cactus while devouring a snake, symbolizing the founding of Mexico City and its triumph over its enemies.

- Population: Mexico is the most populous Spanish-speaking country in the world and one of the most populous countries globally. The population is estimated to be over 126 million people.
- Age Distribution: Mexico has a relatively young population, with a significant portion under the age of 30. The median age is around 29 years.
- Ethnicity: Mexico is ethnically diverse, with a majority of the population being of Mestizo ethnicity, which is a mix of Indigenous and European ancestry. There are also significant Indigenous populations, including groups like the Nahua, Maya, Zapotec, and others.
- Languages: Spanish is the official language of Mexico, and it is spoken by the vast majority of the population. In addition to Spanish, there are numerous Indigenous languages spoken throughout the country, reflecting Mexico's rich cultural heritage.
- Religion: Roman Catholicism has traditionally been the dominant religion in Mexico. However, there is a growing diversity of religious beliefs, including Protestantism and non-religious or secular views.
- Urbanization: Mexico is increasingly urbanized, with a significant portion of the population residing in major cities. Mexico City, the capital, is one of the largest and most populous cities in the world.
- Biodiversity: Mexico is one of the world's most biologically diverse countries. It is home to a wide variety of plant and animal species, including jaguars, monarch butterflies, and a vast array of marine life in the Gulf of California.
